

INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY

International political economy concerns understanding of the complex interactions of economics, politics, and cultures driving the global economy.

Fordham offers undergraduate and graduate programs that offer a unique and innovative interdisciplinary approach to analyzing contemporary global economic relations as well as international development issues.

Program Activities

Study Abroad

Majors are encouraged to study abroad during junior year in order to complement their learning experience at Fordham.

Internships

Students may receive credit for internships having an international focus.

Awards

Seniors may apply for membership into Sigma Iota Rho, the National Honor Society for International Studies. Applicants are required to have a minimum GPA of 3.2 and to have applied for prestigious fellowships, such as the Fulbright, or selected internships with international agencies, such as the State Department.

For more information

Visit the international political economy program web page.