ORGANIZATIONAL LEADERSHIP MAJOR

Virtually all advancement for nonspecialist management and supervisory personnel in business, government, cultural institutions and nonprofit organizations is based largely upon the following competencies or skill sets: the ability to communicate effectively; familiarity with essential organizational functions (such as strategic planning, budgeting, information processing, legal issues, and public relations) broad-based learning and critical thinking skills requisite for continual adaptability to changing responsibilities; and, increasingly, the ability to understand and participate with others in multiple task-groups.

The organizational leadership program, offered at Rose Hill, Lincoln Center, and Westchester, is intended to provide an interdisciplinary array of courses tailored to these educational needs of generalist managers and supervisors. It is intended to provide an alternative to the specialist-oriented major programs and the quantitative emphasis characteristic of colleges of business administration. Further, as contrasted with organizational development curricula at most other universities, Fordham’s program consists largely of standard, discipline-based courses from the liberal arts tradition, not of program-exclusive courses developed in an ad hoc fashion.

Program Activities

The organizational leadership program sponsors guest speakers on related topics periodically during the academic year.

Requirements

The organizational leadership major consists of nine courses.

Students who are planning to major in organizational leadership must first complete:
